 All are cordially invited to these services.

TOWNE TALK

"Just for Fun"

By RAS BERRY.

It says in the Examiner that there was 45,000 people all told at one of the World's serious talks, but it don't say what they was told or who told 'em.

Ras has been arising at 5:30 (two) mornings per wk. of late and going out to the Bellevue golf course to shoot a little meadow and he has got so interested in golf again that he plumb forgot to get out his Towne Talk until just about time for the press to start running. But rather than disappoint his millions of admirers he is trying to dash off a few antidotes post-haste as Al Gourider would say. And he knows they ain't going to be any good, but just the same a guy has got to keep his body fit so you will have to pardon Ras this time. Ras will win (fifty) cents from a banker every one morning this week, and when an editor can get money that easy from a banker, why should he worry about his Towne talks, say we.

Jimmy Hines was late to lunch with a bunch of local committeemen the other noon and somebody says he must of met up with a bozo who wouldn't take no fog a answer.

There is a awful good story going around about Jim Hines which he is telling himself, but when he told Ras he says, this is not for publication so you will have to ask him yourself which you should ought to do because it's a dandy.

Quite a number of local men and their wives left this afternoon for San Diego so they can see the Shenandoah come in early tomorrow and Sam Levy says he don't have to travel that far south to see a bag of wind.

Rev. Ben Lingenfelter is making a strong bid for the job of dog catcher.

News aint so scarce this wk. but Ras is weak from having been so scarce around the station.

Next Witness!
 The prisoner was brought into the courtroom and led to the witness chair.
 "What is your name?" asked the lawyer.
 "Michael Levinkey," was the answer.
 "Can you read?" went on the attorney.
 "Nope," was the reply.
 "Can you write?" came the next on the query list.
 "Whip—I can write," responded the defendant.
 "How does it happen that you can write but not read?" demanded the counsel for the plaintiff.
 "I don't have to read my own writin', do I?" exclaimed the law-breaker.
